

do not take one word no matter what the word is do not take one thing no matter what the thing is do not take one place no matter what the place is as the source.

the world of attributes and comparisons is the self that is screaming because it cannot stand on its own feet.

this is a snake seeing its appetite devour its tail thinking

that it exists as the last supper defining infinity in the bones it spits out of its mouth.

dealing with the issue transcendence.
